Whether you're a history enthusiast, an adventurer, or simply curious, Athens has something for everyone. Here are some of the best things to do in this captivating city.

No trip to Athens is complete without a visit to the iconic Acropolis, a UNESCO World Heritage Site. Perched high above the city, the Acropolis is home to the Parthenon, a majestic temple dedicated to the goddess Athena. Wander through the ruins, marvel at the detailed architecture, and enjoy panoramic views of Athens. Don't miss the Acropolis Museum nearby, which houses artifacts from the site.

Athens, the historical capital of Europe, is a treasure trove of experiences that cater to a variety of interests. For chronic kidney disease (CKD) patients, traveling requires careful planning and consideration, but Athens offers a wealth of opportunities that are both enriching and accommodating to specific health needs.

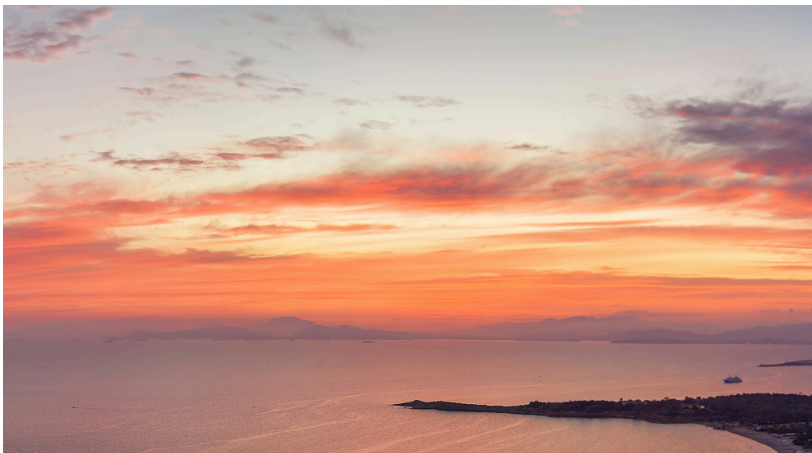

Once the heart of ancient Athens, the Agora was a bustling marketplace and gathering spot for Athenians. Today, it is an archaeological site where you can see the Temple of Hephaestus, one of the best-preserved ancient Greek temples. The Stoa of Attalos, a reconstructed building, now serves as a museum showcasing everyday life in ancient times.

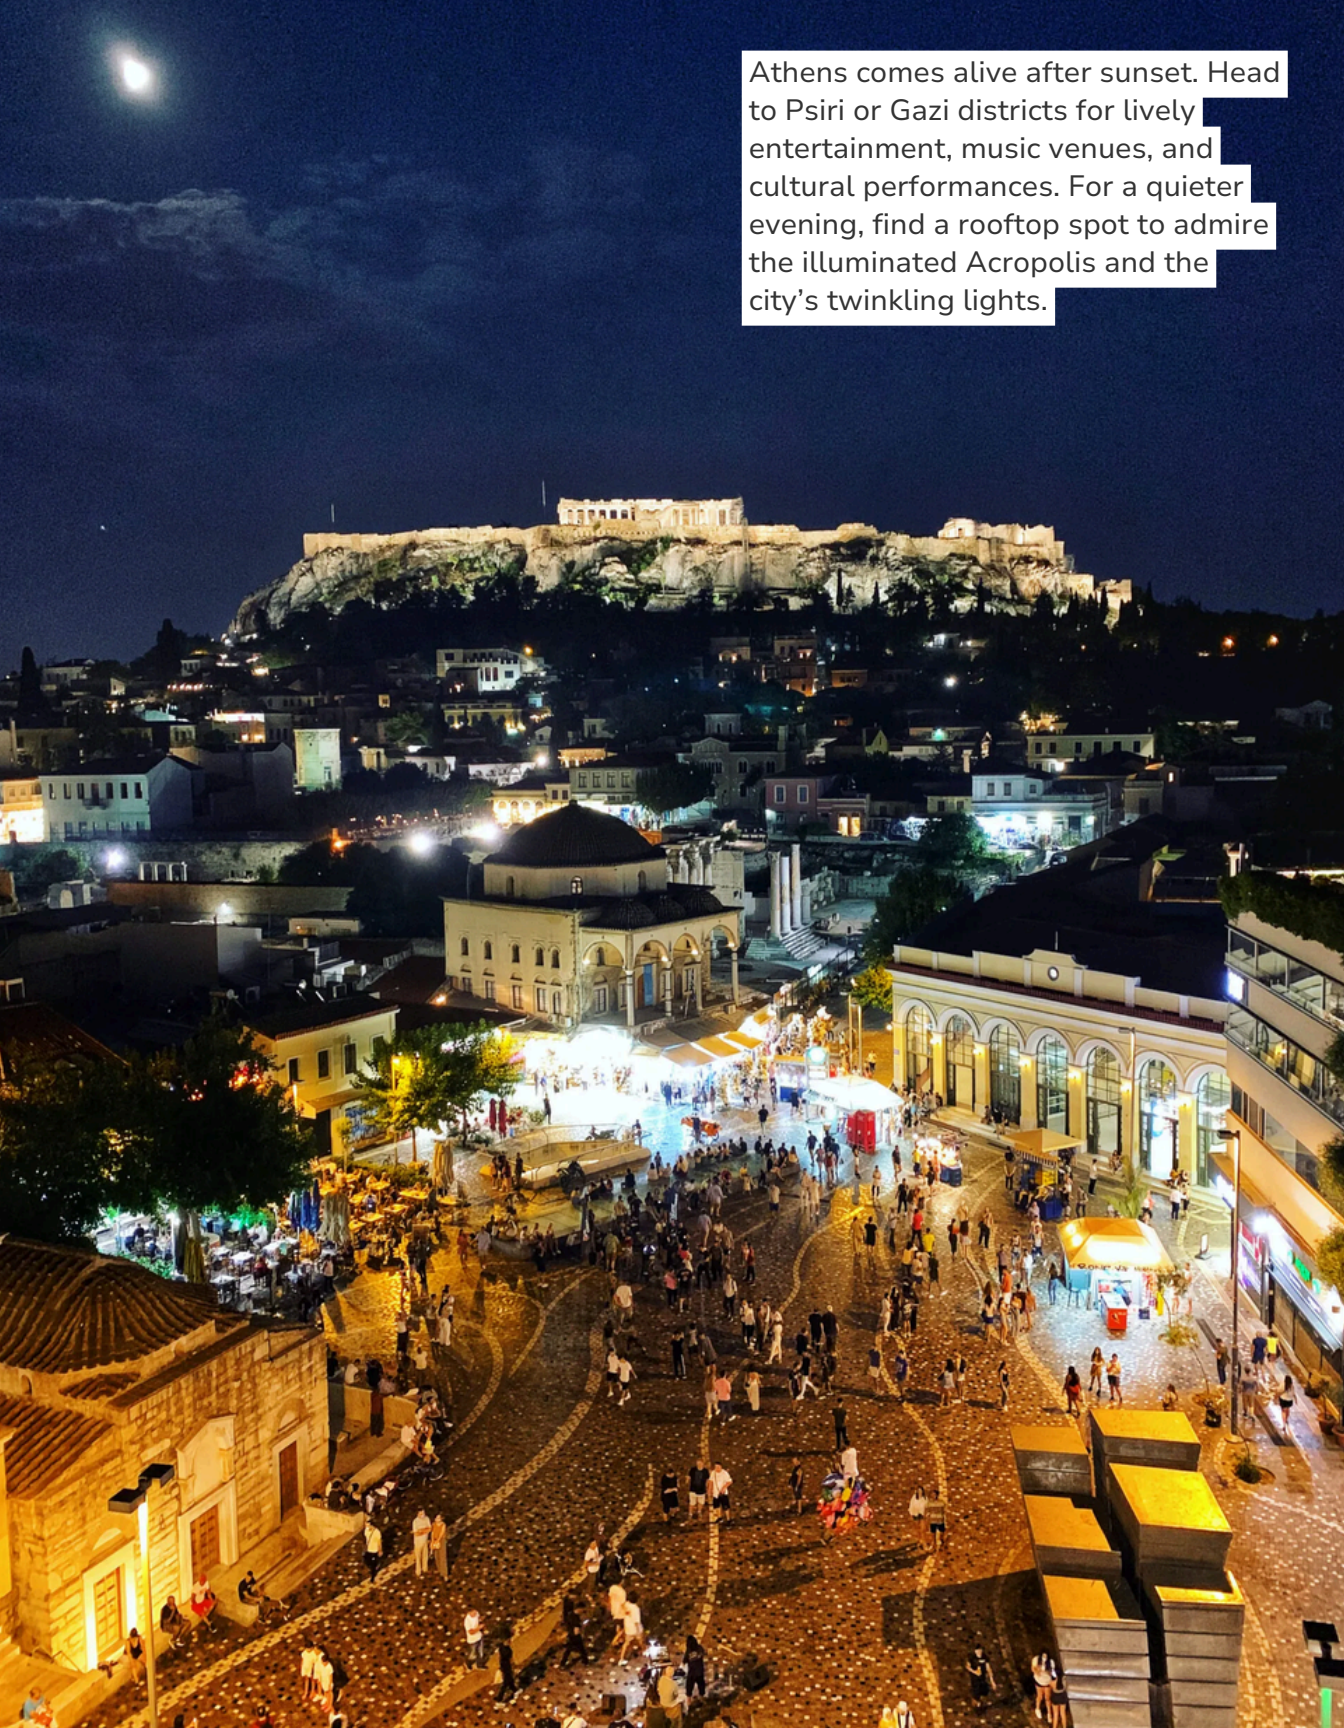

Plaka, the oldest neighborhood in Athens, is a labyrinth of cobblestone streets lined with neoclassical houses and boutique shops. This area exudes charm and offers a peek into the city's past. Enjoy a leisurely walk, shop for handmade souvenirs, and take in the relaxed atmosphere of this historic district.

Athens comes alive after sunset. Head to Psiri or Gazi districts for lively entertainment, music venues, and cultural performances. For a quieter evening, find a rooftop spot to admire the illuminated Acropolis and the city's twinkling lights.
